They're not "too clever;" they seem to apply only to the creator. In other words, there are colloquialisms in here that only he seems to understand. I've had to resort to the answers on several occasions because of this. And I've gone to several friends of mine located in different states to see if they'd know the answers. They didn't. I did the same thing with other clues in which the responses were just plain wrong. I gave him the benefit of the doubt, thinking maybe what I'd learned had been updated; again, asking friends of mine what their answers might be and, again trying to find if the answer might have changed since I'd last checked. Nope. The answer was actually wrong. I'm not sure what happened in the last 10-12 years when I did the WaPo Sunday crossword like clockwork, but this is not the crossword I remember. 5 of 5 people found the following review helpful. Challenging puzzles with humor mixed in. By Magpie I love the Washington Post crossword puzzles. Theyre challenging, and done with a bit of humor. I do a lot of crossword puzzles, and can strongly recommend the Washington Post puzzles to anyone who enjoys a bit of thought without being arcane. 3 of 3 people found the following review helpful. Good book for crossword puzzlers

By Suzanne Sousean
I often like Fred Piscop's puzzles very much, so I am glad I ordered this book. I still found puzzles I have previously done from other crossword puzzle books, with different titles, but I found enough puzzles I had not done to make this purchase worthwhile.

The Washington Post is one of America's few newspapers with its own home-grown Sunday crossword. In this new volume, editor Fred Piscop presents, in book form for the first time, 50 contemporary puzzles designed to pique the interest of crossword fans all across the board.

About the Author
Expert puzzle constructor Fred Piscop is known for his clever themes and lively clues. Before his appointment as crossword editor of the Washington Post Sunday Magazine, Fred was crossword editor of Crossword America and created puzzles for the Time magazine "News Quiz Crossword."
